AN ADDRESS

To the Growers of Burley Tobacco.

The depression in the price of tobacco for the last few years produced by the combinations and trusts which have been formed for the purpose of destroying competition, if not absolutely dictating, the price paid to the producers thereof, is certainly sufficient excuse for a counter organization upon the part of the farmers to protect themselves against the domination imperative that the farmers

Rural life, with its magnificent improvements and daily free mail delivery, now rivals the comforts of urban surroundings, says the Chicago Sun. The ease and certainty with which people in moderate circumstances make a comfortable livelihood a toothpick in their mouths in the country has in the past decade attracted thousands of the population of cities to exploit rural life. The attractions to the industrious of a life of freedom in the open air, cultivating the commercial products of the soil, have stimulated increased movements of city residents with moderate means to embark in market gardening and other possibilities of diversified agricultural production are annually offering new opportry. New York merchant, when asked what had contributed most to his great success, said: "I always looked out for the man at the other end of the bargain." What a lesson these words contain for the young man of to-day who thinks that long-headedness, shrewdness, cunning and sharpness are the only success qualities worth cultivating! Mr. Strauss said that, if he got a bad bargain himself, he could stand it, even if his losses were heavy, but that he could never afford to have the man he dealt with get a bad bargain.
